Prologue

Man has been ceaselessly searching for excellence since the beginning of time. The search of the best has no bounds; humanity sets its own. The advancement of technology has hastened man's ambition to achieve the greatest. Nowadays, information and data are freely accessible to humans practically anywhere on the world. In practical terms, people have the ability to assess themselves based on the education they get. Additionally, there may be differences between the material provided in a social setting and that provided in a scientific journal. It is crucial that both individuals with and without research experience can easily understand the information presented in scientific publications when it comes to scientific standards. One could argue that there is a significant difference between someone who refers to a scientific journal and someone who solely uses everyday scenarios picked up from digital surroundings while speaking.

Scientific journals are significant information sources that have consistently been offered in the service of humanity in the context of science, in accordance with local, regional, and global standards. The authors, referees, and scientific committee should make every effort to make these sources of information better than they currently are. Writing a journal is a labor of love. As educators, it is our drive to do better job in the field of education. I hope we get the chance to interact with more writers and readers every day. We continue to make contribution to IJEL on behalf of those who have education as their top priority. We strive to include more knowledgeable content for you, our respected readers, in each of our publications. We sought to connect researchers from many domains with our international readers in this issue. This issue has been completed, and we are pleased to deliver it to you, our valued readers. This issue's topics include group behavior, virtual games, children's narratives, quantitative research, and organizational commitment. In actuality, operating with this understanding will be our top focus in order to consistently provide you with superior articles. Goodbye to meet in the new issue....

Warmest regards,

Erkan Kiral
